OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

I feel a deep interest in our Merchant Marine. I would give every proper encouragement to our American boys to go to sea. I am hoping the time will come when our shipping under the American flag will be officered and manned by American citizens. Nothing will be more helpful to that end than for those charged with the duty of developing our sea service to take a direct personal interest in our seamen.

They should be made to feel that the seafaring life is honorable and they should be encouraged to lead clean wholesome lives. Nothing will encourage them more than to know that we feel a personal interest in their welfare, and would protect them from unclean and vicious environment at home and abroad.

This little volume has been prepared with great care by Mrs. Alice S. Howard, Chief of the Social Service Bureau, United States Merchant Marine, and her able and indefatigable assistant, Miss Mabel M. Barkley, and should be placed in the hands of the seamen on all our ships. Its value to them and our merchant marine service cannot be estimated.

It gives me great pleasure to commend the Seaman's Handbook for Shore Leave. The author and her collaborator are rendering the seamen a great service which I am sure will be repaid by a deep sense of gratitude.

Secretary of Commerce.

PREFACE

The Social Service Bureau of the United States Merchant Marine presents the second edition of the "Seaman's Handbook for Shore Leave" to merchant seamen in the hope that the material in it will prove of practical value to them in their sea service.

The first edition of the Seaman's Handbook was published by this Bureau, at that time operating as the Social Service Bureau of the United States Shipping Board, Recruiting Service, to meet a need arising from the enrollment of thousands of men in the American Merchant Marine during the world war emergency. Great interest was shown in the first edition, and the favorable comment, which it aroused, coming as it did both from seamen and those who were interested in bettering conditions for them, strengthened our belief that subsequent editions would be of value and should be issued periodically. Replies to many questionnaires were received too late to be incorporated in the first edition, which was rushed to print in order that the material on hand might be available without undue delay. Since the date of its publication, much valuable information has accumulated, and there has been opportunity to correct and verify a great deal of the original material.

This project was undertaken with the purpose of furnishing to seamen a practical guide, giving concise information about living quarters, amusements, and resources available to mariners who find themselves in distress in a strange country. In order to include as many ports as possible, and still keep the book of pocket size, the information about each port is of necessity condensed, and no attempt has been made to embrace the material which would be contained in a Tourists' Guide Book. The scope of the Handbook is limited, rather to material which is of especial interest to merchant sailors, including facts about seamen's

American Consulates; possibilities for legal, medical, surgical and dental aid; laundry facilities; shipping agencies, (including U. S. Shipping Commissioners, Sea Service Bureaus of the U. S. Shipping Board, Union Headquarters, etc.); addresses of American Library Association Dispatch Offices in American ports; as well as places of amusement and local points of interest in so far as space permits.

The present edition of the Handbook gives information about 325 sea ports, representing practically every country in the world, and we regret that, because of the inadequate information which we were able to obtain, we have been obliged to omit 100 additional ports with which we have also been in correspondence.

It was decided, after numerous conferences with those experienced in work for seamen, to adopt the policy of omitting names of individuals and of directing seamen to organizations whose location is supposedly more permanent. This idea has been carried out with few exceptions.

Our sources of information are reliable, so far as we can learn, and the organizations mentioned worthy of confidence, to the best of our knowledge and belief. We should esteem it a favor if anyone noting inaccuracies or misstatements in the publication would bring them to the attention of the Social Service Bureau. We should welcome also, any additional information or suggestions which will serve to increase the usefulness of the Handbook.

It is quite impossible for us to make suitable recognition of the assistance which has been derived from organizations and individuals throughout the world who have contributed material for the Seaman's Handbook. We owe an especial debt, however, to Champlin Burrage and Mabel M. Barkley for their untiring work in editing the first and second editions of this book respectively.

ALICE S. HOWARD,

(Mrs. Henry Howard) Chief, Social Service Bureau,
United States Merchant Marine

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE STATEMENT

"The U. S. Public Health Service has as one of its duties the care and treatment of sick and disabled American seamen. Every one employed on a vessel flying the American flag is entitled to free treatment at the many hospitals and relief stations of the Public Health Service at American ports. This service also issues many pamphlets giving information about the diseases of men and how to avoid them. The pamphlets describing venereal diseases and their consequences are of especial value as the whole world is interested in this important public health question. You can get any of the pamphlets issued by the Public Health Service by writing a post card, addressed as follows: 'The Surgeon General, U. S. Public Health Service, Washington, D. C.' "

GENERAL STATEMENT FROM

The International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations.
347 Madison Ave., New York City.

"Wherever a United States merchant sailor finds a Young Men's Christian Association in any port, regardless of the fact that it may not be for merchant seamen only, he will, if makes himself known to the secretary in charge, be made welcome and afforded the use of the privileges of the Association in line with the practice of each local Young Men's Christian Association."
